About Me

For the last six years I have worked in telecommunications developing innovative programs that focused on organizational strategy and human capital growth. I oversaw two states and was responsible for developing our stores, teams and talent. In January 2014, I made the distinct decision to switch careers and pursue hacking fulltime. Why? I believe the ability to create what I imagine is true freedom. I want to be a part of something greater than money and build real solutions that benefit others.

I am relatively new to the tech world, but have been dabbling with Wordpress and my own startup ideas for the last two years. My goal as a freshly hatched frontend developer is to solve problems that matter by getting involved with companies and projects that are making a difference.
